HOUSE BILL AIMS FOR ‘RACE TO THE TOP’ IN ELECTION SECURITY

By Joseph Marks
March 7, 2017
3 Comments

Legislation introduced Tuesday by two of the House's top tech lawmakers would give states additional grant money to ensure their election systems are secured against hackers.

Introduced by Reps. Jim Langevin, D-R.I., and Gerry Connolly, D-Va., the legislation would also provide grant money for states to upgrade to automatic voter registration systems.

The idea behind the Fair, Accurate, Secure, and Timely Voting Act is to give states flexibility in how to upgrade voting system security rather than prescribing a particular set of upgrades, the lawmakers said in a statement. States would compete for grant money based on the strength of previous reforms and on their plans for future upgrades.

» Get the best federal technology news and ideas delivered right to your inbox. Sign up here.

The concept is loosely based on the Obama administration's Race to the Top initiative, which provided competitive education grants based on innovative ideas.

"The right to vote is essential, and we must foster innovative solutions to bring down every barrier to casting a ballot," Langevin said in a
States would have to prove they're meeting a number of security benchmarks in order to be competitive for the grants, including testing all voting machines in advance of elections and auditing them afterward.

States must also be using machines less than 10 years old, providing a verifiable paper trail of votes and keeping an offline backup of voter registration lists.

Similar legislation has been introduced in previous Congresses in both the House and the Senate, but never made it to a floor vote.

The Homeland Security Department labeled state voting systems as critical infrastructure during the last days of the Obama administration, which will make them eligible for additional federal grant money.

That designation followed a Russian influence campaign to undermine confidence in the electoral process that included hacking Democratic political organizations. U.S. intelligence agencies found no evidence Russian intelligence agencies hacked into state election systems.

---

RECOMMENDED FOR YOU

---

SPONSORED LINKS

- Santander Personal Loans
  Break away from high interest debt with a Personal Loan. Rates as low as 6.99% APR
  Santander Bank

- Retirees LOVE this man's income secret
  Thousands of retirees are rushing to follow this man's secret to making an extra $67,548 per year.
  Investing Daily

- Insider Buying Frenzy
  Insiders Stockpiling Shares of this Tiny Tech Company
  Investing Daily

- How 1 Man Turned $50K Into $5.3 Million
  Jim Fink wasn’t a professional investor, but using this simple trade he amassed a $3MM fortune.
  Investing Daily

- 33rd Annual Space Symposium - Colorado Springs, CO
  Join us April 3 - 6 for the 33rd Space Symposium. Register today!
  www.spacesymposium.org

- AFCEA Bethesda's "A Night for the Children" Gala - April 1st
  A Night for the Children is a rare opportunity that combines a memorable evening out while making a difference in the lives of children and families in need.
  The Gala is a night when our generous community comes together to benefit. Learn more about how you can be a hero here.
  bethesda.afceachapters.org
Jack Chanse · 2 days ago

_tut tut. anything Obama won’t get funded. and red states are upping their vote suppression game. but... clever name._

highiq · 3 days ago

What are they going to cut to pay for it??

rudyformayor · 3 days ago

As fast as the electronic world is moving, we need to ensure paper no computers to do this “most important task” to keep Democracy alive.