WASHINGTON — The Senate Judiciary Committee has uncovered evidence that Jared Kushner, President Trump's son-in-law and senior adviser, was forwarded a document about a “Russian backdoor overture” that Mr. Kushner failed to hand over to the panel’s investigators, according to a letter that the committee released on Thursday.

The Senate letter did not say what type of back channel communication the Russians were trying to set up. But it noted that “other parties have produced documents concerning the matter.”

Mr. Kushner also failed to provide investigators with a September 2016 email he was sent about WikiLeaks, nor did he hand over other communications with a Russian-born businessman that were forwarded him, according to the letter. The businessman, Sergei Millian, a former head of the Russian-American Chamber of Commerce, has long claimed to have ties to Mr. Trump and his associates — ties that Mr. Trump's advisers have said are overstated.

WikiLeaks has been identified by American intelligence agencies as acting as a conduit for information that Russian intelligence operatives had stolen from Democrats during the 2016 presidential campaign. Earlier this week, it was revealed that Donald Trump Jr., the president’s oldest son, had repeated communications with the anti-secrecy group on Twitter.

The Senate panel said that Mr. Kushner has also not produced phone records that investigators believe exist, although the letter gave no specifics about the records. The letter was signed by Senators Charles E. Grassley, Republican of Iowa and Dianne Feinstein, Democrat of California, the two senior members of the Judiciary Committee.

“We appreciate your voluntary cooperation with the committee's investigation, but the production appears to have been incomplete,” said the letter, which was sent to Mr. Kushner’s lawyer, Abbe Lowell.

“It appears that your search may have overlooked several documents,” it stated.

In a statement on Thursday, Mr. Lowell said that Mr. Kushner had responded to all of the committee's requests.

“We provided the Judiciary Committee with all relevant documents that had to do with Mr. Kushner’s calls, contacts or meetings with Russians during the campaign and transition, which was the request,” Mr. Lowell said. “We also informed the committee we will be open to responding to any additional requests and that we will continue to work with White House Counsel for any responsive documents from after the inauguration.”

Over the summer, Mr. Grassley and Ms. Feinstein said they intended to conduct a bipartisan inquiry into how the Justice Department and F.B.I. handled the investigations into Mr. Trump’s connections to Russia, as well as into the firing of James B. Comey, the former F.B.I. director.

After sending initial requests for information to the president’s associates and conducting interviews — including a closed-door interview with the Donald Trump Jr. (https://www.nytimes.com/2017/09/07/us/politics/trump-russia-investigation.html) — tension arose between Republican and Democrat investigators about who should be questioned and what documents should be sought.

The Senate letter also pressed Mr. Lowell on why he has refused to hand over a copy of a government document that Mr. Kushner completed to obtain a security clearance. The document Mr. Kushner submitted — known as an SF-86 — has been amended at least twice, after he failed to disclose meetings he had with foreign leaders, including numerous Russians.

Among the meetings that Mr. Kushner did not initially disclose was a June 2016 gathering at Trump Tower that included Donald Trump Jr., Paul J. Manafort, then the campaign chairman, and Russians who had promised “dirt” on Hillary Clinton.

“You declined to produce documents requested from the committee from your SF-86, on the basis that the documents are confidential and have been submitted to the F.B.I. for its review,” the letter stated. “However, if Mr. Kushner or his counsel retained copies of the forms, you should produce them.”

Sign Up for the Morning Briefing

Get what you need to know to start your day in the United States, Canada and the Americas, delivered to your inbox.

SEE SAMPLE (HTTPS://WWW.NYTIMES.COM/NEWSLETTERS/SAMPLE/MORNING-BRIEFING)
Complete coverage of Russia's campaign to disrupt the 2016 presidential election.
Opinion: Using the Justice Dept. to Punish Foes

Readers decry President Trump’s call for an investigation of Hillary Clinton: “He is positively obsessed with the woman he beat in the last election.”

Russia may start requiring foreign media organizations to label news they produce as the work of a “foreign agent.”

The measure is said to be a response to a U.S. requirement imposed on the state-owned RT television network, but it is far broader in scope.

Who Really Gets a Tax Increase if the Individual Mandate Goes Away?

On government tables, it looks as if it's low-income people. But the real losers would be higher up the income scale.

1h ago
The days of shrugging off sexual misconduct at the Capitol may be over, our Washington columnist writes.

The days when unwanted sexual approaches and wandering hands escape scrutiny may be coming to an end.
Republican Congress Members Accuse Cuomo of ‘Outright Lying’

A claim by Gov. Andrew Cuomo that he had spoken to all the Congress members from New York who voted for the tax bill is being disputed.