

CSCI 2300 – Collaboration Policy

This seminar depends on four assignments. We adopt a rather liberal collaboration policy, which we hope will encourage learning and future success in collaborative projects. Assignments and course material may be discussed freely among students, but all written work and code should be your own. If you use any materials that are not your own, please cite the sources. As such, you own your work but you may be asked to contribute your results to group projects / group papers that you will be involved with. Finally, please note that paper reviews we read in class and resulting discussion are confidential and not for sharing outside of class.

By signing this document, you agree to abide by the CSCI 2300 Collaboration Policy, as published above and available on the course website. Please read carefully this document, sign it, and hand it in during class on February 1 (or via email before the next class on February 8). No homework will be graded until we have this document on file.
